

THE DAILY APPEAL.

SATURDAY—NOVEMBER 6, 1868.

MARSHAL AND TERRITORY RAILED.—The total receipts of the road for the month of October were $22,842.

COURT'S COUNSEL.—The R-writer is a worthy creature, but he was badly patronized yesterday, having only four cases before him.

ATTENTION IS CALLED TO THE ADVERTISEMENT OF MR. JNO. M. BURKE, who offers a valuable plantation for sale in Coahoma county, Mississippi.

COURT.—At this Court, yesterday, the jury in the "French Lou" case had not agreed upon a verdict in the time of adjournment.

DEPARTED.—Major Brown, started for Nashville last evening, and to-day Alderman STREET enters upon his duties as Mayor of this city of Memphis.

THANKS.—Our native friend, Beane, of Adair & Co's Express, has again undertaken his usual duties for eastern papers also we thank CHARL. C. SCOTT, clerk of the No. 1 office.

A MEAN TRICK.—A sneaking fellow named HARRY DIXON was, yesterday, arrested for snatching two dollars out of the hand of a little girl, daughter of Mrs. COFFEY, of DeSoto street. He will be examined to-day on the charge.

JACKSON'S BOSS.—The marble bust of Gen. JACKSON, by FRASER, will arrive in this city in about six days, soon after which it will be placed in Court Square, according to the plans of the Board of Trade. It is the model of the bust of the General in existence, and has been purchased by a number of gentlemen in this city, who magnificently devote it to the public.

MARSHAL.—John Green, although young in years, is a confirmed thief, and has several times been arrested for stealing. He relishes a week away from a three months' residence in the penitentiary, and as little moral advantage had he derived from the remedy the laws provide for the correction of vice, that is a dispute with his mother, yesterday, the young scoundrel drew his knife upon her. He was arrested.

SCHOOL.—The members of that eccentric society, the Young Men's Missionary Association, have determined to open a Sunday School at 9 o'clock to-morrow morning, at the junction of Elliot and South streets. As there is no church immediately in this neighborhood, the selection of the location is a good one, and we hope the residents of the neighborhood will co-operate with them in their Christian labors.

The association is in connection with the Second Presbyterian Church.

DEPARTURE OF THE WAGON ROAD EXPEDITION.—We learn from the Fort Smith Times, that the expedition for opening a wagon road from Fort Smith to California, under the superintendence of Lieut. BEALE, left that city on the 27th ult. The company, when together, including the mid-day escort, amount to about 200 men, a train of 35 wagons accompanying them. The escort consisted of United States troops.

REPAIRS.—A new and superior composite roof is being done by the Tennessee "Mastic Roofing Company," where they have their offices at 157 Main street, and where this valuable discovery is exhibited. It can be applied, and can be applied over old shingles, without taking them off. It is rapidly applied, and a leaking roof can be made tight in a few hours, or a new roof put on in a few days. Those who desire a house in every way substantial are urged to call and examine it.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

THEFT.—A steam house keeper's roof is being done by the Tennessee "Mastic Roofing Company," where they have their offices at 157 Main street, and where this valuable discovery is exhibited. It can be applied, and can be applied over old shingles, without taking them off. It is rapidly applied, and a leaking roof can be made tight in a few hours, or a new roof put on in a few days. Those who desire a house in every way substantial are urged to call and examine it.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to the city yesterday, from Mississippi, and compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains and to pay all expenses, amounting, we hear, to four hundred dollars.

After a "strange" has been made, the thief was allowed to go free, by which justice was deprived of doing a most meritorious act by sending him to the penitentiary. We learn that the man never got into the custody of our police, who made an unsuccessful attempt to take him.

ADVERTISER.—Summers, who sold three bales of cotton and sold them to Mr. Rawson, was brought to